

Muslim matrimonial sites are gaining popularity as an alternative to arranged marriages.

The internet has brought about a very progressive movement in the way couples have met online and why shouldn't it also help Muslims who are finding it difficult to find love. Muslim matrimonial sites have risen from the ashes of the arranged marriages fiasco. They offer men and women the chance to control their own destiny. Muslim matrimonial sites have been circulating for years and have a small but rapidly growing following in the Muslim community. The way they operate is simple enough, single Muslims join looking for a partner but unlike other 'dating sites', the emphasis is not on dating but on finding a suitable marriage partner for life. Therefore the individuals who are on these Muslim matrimonial sites are comparatively more serious about their search for a partner as casual dating is not permitted in Islam. Many Muslims still feel uncomfortable about admitting they have joined Muslim matrimonial sites. It is under the misconception that online Muslim matrimonial sites are only exclusive to the desperate or those that have something fundamentally wrong with their personality.
